Session Description

Experts believe there have been three waves of gambling in the United States: establishing the colonies with lotteries, traveling west for the gold rush, and legalizing casinos in Nevada during the Great Depression. Despite previous challenges, gambling today is a $100 billion commercial enterprise – with legalized gambling available in every state except Utah and Hawaii.

Many experts believe that the fourth wave of gambling expansion is online gambling. There are roughly eight billion people in the world. Over five billion of those people use the internet. Over four billion people are active social media users and over three billion people play video games. Technology is not just a part of a person's daily routine and school and work environment, but it is an integral part of most people's lives.

Not surprising, there has been an uptick in young people gambling online with little to no safeguards or safe design standards to protect vulnerable populations from not just gambling, but also the persuasive design techniques that influence human behavior and keep them online and spending money. In addition, recent research is unveiling how gambling marketing and advertising is being directed at youth via social media.

This webinar will provide attendees with an introduction to the complexities of youth problem gambling. Participants will learn how all forms of gambling have impacted youth behaviors and begin to learn about the complexities of gambling expansion in the online world.
